

NUTS AND BOLTS

Controlling infection

This is an important component of performing an echo and will be informed by your institution's policies and practice guidelines. As a general rule, anything that touches the patient should be cleaned carefully after every scan. Some cleaning agents can damage ultrasound probes, so make sure you use a method the manufacturer supports and it's good practice to routinely check the probe for damage before you use it.

